REVOLUTION IN FRANCE, REPORT OF THE COMMTTTEE, CHARGED WITH THE WORK OF PREPARING MATERIALS FOR FORMING

THE CONSTITUTION, Read by Monfieur MOUNIER, in the NATIONAL ASSEMBLY, the 9th of July.
(Concluded from our lall. greatelt number, if not all, of our instructions.

The greatest number, it not ask, or our intractions impose on us the necessity of fixing the Constitution of the kingdom—of establishing fundamental laws to fecure for ever the prosperity of France. Our constituents have forbidden us to grant the subsidies before the establishment of the Constitution. We shall obey the nation then by an immediate application to this inportant work:

We shall difftinguish, Gentlemen, among the objects which are recommended to us, those which belong to the Constitution, from those which are only proper for making particular laws. This diffinction is easy and obvious; because it is impossible to con found the organization of the power of a state with the regulations flowing from the legislation. It is e-vident that we ought to consider ourselves under two different points of view; while we are occupied in the care of fixing that organization on a we shall act as constituents, in virtue of the powers which we have received: while we are occupied in making laws, we shall act simply as delegates.

But onght we first to apply ourselves to the forma-tion of the Constitution, or to the enacting of particu-lar laws? Certainly the choice is not difficult.

ar laws? Certainly the choice is not difficult.

If we were to prepare laws before we have affigned character and limits to the different powers, we a character and limits to the different powers, we should, it is true, experience the advantage of graduating our steps; we should, so to speak, exercise our talents in easier things, in order to pass on with improved ability, to more difficult; but they who would prefer this order, ought to consider, that if we commence by occupying ourfelves with the articles of le-gillation, recommended in the different instructions, gillation, recommended in the different infructions, we should have a great number of questions arise; every one, to give a proof of his zeal, would be for proposing the reform of some one abuse. In the diversity of objects presented at the same time, it will be necessary to decide which are of the most importance: Thefe discussions being unlimited, in respect to time, we shall retard the reitoration of national cre-dit, since we are not to occupy our felves in the bush dit, fince we are not to occupy, ourfelves in the bufiness of subsidies, till after the establishment of a Con-

It were doubtless to be wished that we could do, in

It were doubtless to be wished that we could do, in one single Scision, all the good our zeal inspires us with the desire of doing; but let us at least do that which is evidently necessary.

There is no evil so great which the possession of liberty will not make us support, nor are there any advantages which will compensate for its loss. Let us leize the favourable moment; let us liasten to procue this bleffing for our country; let us profit by the beneficent intentions of his Majesty. When liberty is once fixed, when the legislative power is determined, good laws will present themselves of counte. It is by securing the periodical return, or the permanence of good laws will present another or the permanence of fecuring the periodical return, or the permanence of National Affemblies; it is by defining and fettling their National Alternates; it is you are guiating the extent form and composition, and in regulating the extent and limits of all the powers of the state, that you will eftablish liberty. There is not a pertin among us who ought not to efteem himself extremely happy in being able to present to his constituents a good Constitution, if that be the only result of the labours of this Affembly; and undoubtedly we shal not be honoured by their approbation, if we prefeit them with a few infolated laws, abandoning at the time time the great object of public liberty.

The end of all focieties being the general happiness, a Government which has a different or a contrary a Government which has a different or a contrary tendency to the promoting this end, is effinially vicious. A Conflictation, to be good, must be founded on the rights of men, and mult evidently protect them: in preparing a Conflictation, then, it is necessary to know the rights which natural judice accordance overy individual; it is necessary to year to the mind the principles which ought to form the balls of every species of society, that every article of the Conflictation may be the just confequence of a just principle. The expecting of these principles is by many ple. The exposition of these principles is by many prodesn writers on laws of nations called a declaration of rights.

The Committee conceives it convenient, is order to recal the end of our Constitution, that a declara-tion of the rights of men should precede it, but that this declaration should be placed in form of a prean-ble, before the articles of the Constitution, and not made to appear separate from it. The Committee thinks that this last course would afford little advantage, and might be attended with inconveniencies that abstract and philosophical ideas, if not accompanied by their particular confequences, leave room to draw others than what will be admitted by the Affern bly; that in not determining in a difinitive manner this declaration of rights, till the moment in which the examination of all the articles of the Confitution thall be finished, the advantage will be gained of combining more exactly every thing which oughts to enter into the expolition of the principles, and to be accepted as a confequence from them. This desired it in ought to be hort, simple, and precise. It is then a declaration of rights, considered, as a preamble to the Constitution, which ought first to occupy the advances of the Arthur the constitution. tention of the Affembly, but wishout deter a definitive manner.

Here the Committee should communicate its views concerning the direction of the labours of the Affen-bly, relative to the Conflitution. It would be infinitebly, relative to the Conflictation. It would be infinitely dangerous to confide to a Committee the care of rorming a plan of a Conflictation, and then to have it decided upon afterwards in a few Seffions. The face of 24 millions of men must not thus be put to the hazard of precipitate deliberations; it will be more conformable to prudence to cause all the articles of the Conflictation to be discussed at the same time in all our several Committees; to establish a particular Committee of correspondence, who shall meet at certain hours to commare the dominous which appears to one hours to compare the opinions which appear to pre-vail in the different Committees, and who shall co-deavour, by this means, to prepare a certain uniformity of principles.

erticles of the Constitution ought to have the most intimate connection, no one, fingly/can be determined upon till all are maturely confider-ed. The last article may give rise to reflections upon the first, which may fuggest a change or modification

It is possible, indeed, that the discussion of the articles of the Constitution may consume considerable time; but no motive ought to influence us to act with precipitation. The greatest of all evils to which we can be exposed, would be the establishment of a vican be expoted, would be the establishment of a vicious Constitution; but that we may not be thought to remain in inactivity, at the time we are in factorcupied about the greatest of all interests, and that all the members of this Assembly may have the estimate and the best means of affording each other mutual light and information, let the House be resolved into a General Committee three times in every week, to debut corrector may those chiefs, which have have a General Committee three times in every week, to debate together upon those objects which have been previously discussed in the separate ones. In adopting this mode, we shall unite many advantages, as that of regulating ourselves by principles, and that of profiting by the lights of those members who expect new instructions to qualify them to vote in this Alfembly. They will, no doubt, be eager to communicate their reflections to us; and during the exami-nation, they will gain a fufficient time to obtain a greater liberty, without subjecting to this confideration the activity of the Assembly, which dught never to be suspended.

After the declaration of the rights which men ought to enjoy in all focieties, we should proceed to the principles which constitute a just monarchy, and afterwards to the rights of Frenchmen. The repre-fentatives of the nation, in thus folemply renewing the declaration of the King's rights, will self his au-thority upon an unalterable bass. All the means of fecuring the exercise of the respective rights of the nation and the monarchy should then be examined in succession. The Committee will have the honour of laying before you the principal divition of a plan of Conflictation. If the Affembly defire it they will speedily present it with the plan of subdivisions

We are then arrived at the moment which will de-cide upon the deftiny of France. May your zeal, Gentlemen, meet with all the fuccess it deferves.— May a reciprocal confidence dissipate all alarms.—May it never be forgot, that, whatever is just and useful whatever contributes to the maintenance of public or der, is the concern of the nation at large, of which we are every one of us conflituted the defenders! Surely, then, the Deputies from all parts of the king dom will no longer occupy themselves about their particular rights, which are only calculated to secure their provinces from the yoke of arbitrary power. They will prefer a general liberty, a common happiness, to the fad privilege of being diffinguished in fervitude by a few feeble advantages. Finally, may all the Provinces, by the organ of their Representatives, contract between themselves and the Throne an alliance equal, firm, and eternal!

ORDER of PROCEEDING, proposed by the COMMITTEE. Article I. Every Government ought to have the maintenance of the rights of men for its fole end: from whence it follows, that, to recal Government to the end proposed, the Constitution ought to comthe declaration of the natural and unalie-nable rights of men.

II. The monarchical government has been chosen by the French nation as a proper one to maintain its rights. It is above all forms the most covenient for a large fociety. It is necessary to the happiness of France. Therefore, a declaration of the principles of this species of Government ought immediately to follow the declaration of the rights of man.

Ill. It refults from the principles of monarchy, that the nation, to fecure its own rights, has conceded particular rights to the Monarch. The contitution, then, ought to declare, in a precise manner, the rights board of the one and the other.

IV. It is necessary to begin, by declaring the rights of the French nation, and afterwards to declare the rights of the King.

"Sir, Paris, July 26.
"It has been communicated to me from divers quarters, that endeavours have been made to infinuate, that my Court had formented in part the troubles that have afflicted the capital for some time past; that the had taken advantage of the present opportunity to take up arms against France; and that even a fleet was upon the coalt to co-operate with the discontent-ed party. Totally delittute of truth as these rumours are, they appear to me to have reached the National Affembly; And the Coarier National, which gives an account of the fittings of the 23d and 24th of this month, leaves suspicions which give me so much more pain, as you know, Sir, how far my Court is from deserving them.

Lam, with respect, &c. (Signed) Bafil, July 23. 1789.

Monfieur Necker arrived at Paris, agreeable to the above intimation. The exuitations of the people of this occasion are hardly to be described: The not turnultuous acclamations rended the air; and, in the wildness of their joy, this favourite Minister was besidered as little lefs than a Deity!

The King received M. Necker with great confus-ty and affection:—His arrival appeared to cal the afflicted monarch of a weight which had well night-verborne him. M. Necker attended the National Affembly, ad there met with every mark of respect and attende: He submitted several proposals to that body, for the re-establishment of peace; all of which were unaimoufly adopted.

Paris is quiet—Necker's name has operated a a charm, and all orders repore confidence in his certions.—Not a doubt is entertained by the people, but that their wifnes will now be crowned with fuerels.

The Queen's favournes are all temoved. Vermont, and Comte D'Angivillers are difinified; as also his Majesty's own Valet-de-Chambre, Mons. Thierry, who was thought to have treather. as ano his Majetty's own Valet-de-Chambers, most Thierry, who was thought to have great influence over his Royal Mafter, and to have inclined him to a dopt the violent measures suggested to him by others. On this account the National Assembly called for his removal, and has obtained it.

It will appear odd to people in England to hear that the Nation should defeend so low as to defire the King to discharge his Valet-de-Chambre.—But in France, where custom and etiquette govern every thing, influence has always been incidental or at-tached to the fituation of the King's Valet-de-Chambre; and humble as the name is, the person who bears it is always a powerful man in the Court. And if a lift was formed of Ministers of State made and if a lift was formed of Ministers of State made and unmade by a Valet-de-Chambre to a King, the length of it would astonish the world. In Franche Compte, the too well founded tumuks have degenerated into the most horrid excesses; they are every where destroying the property of the Nobles;

A great fire broke out on the 9th of March last at Bengal in the square of the fort, where the artiscers work, which consumed the whole building; but the progress was stopped by the indefatigable endeavours of Colonel Pearle, the Commandant, otherwise the whole garrison might have suffered. The square was about 3000 seet on each side; the lower part of the buildings was work shops, and the upper, store-rooms for teats, fixt ammunition, gun-carriages, and small stores. The fire communicated to all the sides nearly at the same instant; it began at the panter's shop, and run through the carpenter's to the place where the carriages were; many of which are saved, with a quantity of stores and sixt ammunition; but all the tents, amounting in value to about one lack, together with stores and gun-carriages, tumbrils, see in the whole to three lacks are destroyed; likewise forme thores, arms, and clothing, belonging to the 42d regiment, valued at sixty thousand rupees. The building coil, about one lack; but as the articles are chief, if country made, except the tents, they will be castly replaced.

According to a letter received on Monday from the Continent, the Courts of Madrid, Turin, and Yienha, are negociating a plan to relieve France from her present troubles; and it is said further, they intend inviting other Soverereigns on the same subject, and to some application has been made already.

It is generally supposed that the Duke of Dorset's residence in Paris will now be but of short duration: a ship has been stationed for some days past at Boulogne, in order to bring his Grace to England.

So general had the suspicion of the English become, that a Gentleman's servant who arrived in town on Monday, had nearly been murdered in coming thro' Normandy. A dragoon levelled his pistol at his head, and had not an instaneous stop been put to his hand by the intereserence of a gentleman, he would have certainly blown out his brains. The pretext was, that the English were enemies to the French nation, and even dinied them a morsal of bread when they were starving.

The French Metropolis is at prefent perfectly quiet, and all the Bankers of that city write to their correspondents here, that every thing is in a fair way of being reftored to a flare of tranquility and fettlement. fpondents here, that every thing is in a fair way of being reflored to a flate of tranquility and ferthement. The exhange has rifen at Paris from 27 15-16ths to 28 1-4th, and 28 5-8ths. The bankers letters in general express fentiments of the greatest exolation on the promising prospect of affairs and speak with confidence of the probability of France soon becoming the first nation on the face of the globe.

The Duchess de Polignac has had a second escape, through the presence of mind of an Abbé, who was with her in her carriage.

Just as she had changed horses at Saumur, she saw many people collested at the gate, who appeared to be waiting with imparience for the arrival of the carriage, that they might see who were the travellers.

The Abbe perceived that the Duchess, at the light of them, grew pale and red by turns, and was all in a tremor. These symptoms, he seared, would betray her; and therefore, to divert their attention from the Lady, he put his head out of the carriage, and addressing the people, faid—

"I see, my honest fellows, you want to have some news—I have glad tidings to impart to you—That damned b—— the Duchess de Polignac, and her whole crew, have been obliged to decamp.—The honest Genevan (Mr Necker) is at Versailles; he arrived there a little before we set out, and was most graciously received by the King."

The people hearing this, began to shout for joy, and thank the gentleman for the good news. The possiblions, in the mean time, put forward with all

The Duchefs afterwards thanked the Abbé for her The Duchets afterwards thanked the Abbe for her-life, which she said she was fure she owed to him-She declared, that the most refined flattery that ever was offered to her had never been the twentieth part so pleasing to her ears, as the abusive name he had bonouved her with, for the purpose of preventing the people knowing that he was the person to whom he applied it.

The Marquis de la Fayette, difgusted with the ferocious conduct of the people of Paris, and with some diffespectful and injurious language which he heard they had used against him, affembled the Committee of Safety, and tendered to them his relignation of Colonel-General of the Militia of Paris.

He observed, that his election to that fituation had been condemned, as he had been informed, by several of the Wards of the Civa.

ral of the Words of the City.

The Committee refused to accept the refignation; and begged he would not think of withdrawing himself from the fervice of his country, which stood to much in need of him. He still infitted that he mult reign; however, he was at last overcome by the teats and corrections of the Departies of the people, and conferred to retain his commission.

We are credibly informed, that a large fleet, laden with wheat, flour, meal, and rice, from feweral A-merican ports, were fooke with about noon on Wed-nefday the 15th ult, ten-leagues from the island of St Marrio, on the coast of Britanny, all well. They are to be divided into separate classes, and proceed for Bourdeaux, Rochelle, Nantz, &c. where they must by this time have arrived, to the great joy of the distressed inhabitants of those populous towns.

The new duties imposed upon stamps are an additional reason for establishing an office for stamping paper at Edinburgh, an object of much importance to the manufacture of paper in this country. By the present system, the consumers of stamps in Edinburgh are in a much worse studied in the consumers of stamps in London, which is expressly contrary to an article of the Union, declaring that Scotland shall have the same privileges and benefits of trade as England.

Why should not Scotland have a Board of Stamps as well as a Board of Customs and Excise?
